

One Flew Under The Keepers Vest

A humorous look at Sunday football league side Wizard, 1986 to 1996 through the muddled eyes of a London Irish family, with a wry glance at most sports. The author reflects on village and big city life. Dad coaching his children and those of his neighbours before managing adult sides and later helping out Saturday semi-pro teams as match day secretary, kit man and general assistant. A Managers story of life in a nits shell. Very influenced by American sports analysis, statistics here reveal how many games played, how many goals scored and how many times each player assisted another to score, long before the F.A and TV pundits used them. The invention of the Sin Bin in training earlier than the Rugby habit.
